A person wearing a blue and white plaid shirt and a black wristwatch is seated at a wooden table. They are holding a black pen and filling out a white form that has various sections and checkboxes. The form appears to be a survey or a registration form. The person's head is bowed, and their focus is on the document. The table is made of light-colored wood with a visible grain.

WENDY'S EMPLOYEES
ROBBED AT GUNPOINT,
TWO ACCOMPLICES AR-RESTED

The Wendy's at 3006 Anderson Ave. was robbed by an armed gunman on Sunday, which is the second robbery of a Manhattan fast food restaurant in the month of April.

Police received the call at 11:43 p.m. on Sunday, and, after investigating the incident, officers discovered that a black male dressed in dark clothing and a mask had robbed the employees with a handgun and then left the scene with about $2,000.

A similar incident occurred at about 11:45 p.m. on April 4, when a man armed with a pistol robbed the McDonald's located on Westloop Place, just off of Anderson Ave.

Richard Lawrence of the 1300 block of Cambridge Place, and Gilbert Floyd Blizzard Jr., of the 2400 block of Charolais Lane, were arrested following a police investigation for alleged involvement in the Wendy's robbery. The suspected robber, however, is still at large.

The Riley County Police Department, with the assistance of witnesses, released an alert bulletin with a sketch of the armed robber.

The suspect for the crime was described as roughly 6-feet tall and dark skinned with a thin build.

RCPD is currently investigating whether or not the crimes are related.

Anonymous tips can be left with the Riley County Crime Stoppers at 785-537-7777 or toll free at 1-800-222-TIPS (8477).

Easy recipe offers fantastic, fresh taste, satisfying leftovers

Homemade salsa

recipe review by Lauren Gocken

Lately I've been very interested in starting my own garden and producing my food; I would love to raise my own chickens and have a gargantuan garden with lettuces, tomatoes, peppers, carrots, garlic and more. But the only problem with that is that I don't especially like vegetables. I'm a carnivore pining to be a vegetarian and in order to make the switch from meats to beets, I need to start liking more vegetables besides potatoes and ketchup. So this semester I've starting incorporating more fresh produce into my meals. Something about making the decision to use the veggies and finding fun new recipes is making the experimenting fun and easy. So far I've added bok choy, kale, fresh peppers, ginger (it's a root) and tomatoes to the mix.

I decided on this recipe because all the ingredients are natural, it's easy to make and clean up, and I was hoping to find an easy and delicious homemade salsa. And I did. I had my roommate and boyfriend eat some chips and salsa with me and they both liked it as well.

Preparation: ★★★★★
This recipe is too easy to make. There's only five ingredients and you chop them up, broil and blend them and then they're done.

Taste: ★★★★★
This salsa tasted great, it actually tastes a lot like a spicier Pace picante sauce. I added two more jalepenos to the mix because I like the taste and the heat. I also added a dash of cumin into the blender just because I like cumin with Mexican foods.

I did make one sort of big change, I used two little bunches (nine tomatoes total like the recipe) of tomatoes on the vine instead of plum tomatoes. I looked for plum tomatoes at three different groceries in Manhattan and couldn't find them so instead I chose the tomatoes on the vine because they were the healthiest looking tomatoes in the store. While I'm sure this made an impact on the end taste and texture, I think it's minor enough that they would have tasted very similar.

Leftover potential: ★★★★★
This recipe keeps for two weeks in a sealed container and the taste gets better when it sets, and since it makes quite a bit of salsa that's a definite plus. That's about the best leftover potential I've ever had.

Lauren Gocken is a senior in secondary education. Please send comments to edge@kstatecollegian.com.

Roasted Tomato Salsa

Ingredients
9 plum tomatoes, cut into 1/2 inch pieces
1 large white onion
3 jalepenos
2 garlic cloves, unpeeled
Coarse salt

Preheat broiler. Place all ingredients on a rimmed baking sheet and broil until the tomatoes and jalepenos are charred, about seven minutes. Let stand until cool enough to handle. Peel the roasted garlic. Transfer ingredients to a blender with salt and puree until smooth. For a thinner consistency, add water as needed. Season with salt to taste. Salsa can be covered and refrigerated for up to two weeks.

Recipe from marthastewart.com.

Lauren Gocken | Collegian

Above: While the salsa could be used as a taco or enchilada sauce, it's great with a bunch of tortilla chips and a tall glass of water.

Left: The tomatoes, jalepenos, garlic and onion start to char and pucker as they get broiled. The onion may burn before the tomatoes and jalepenos are done so they can just be removed early.

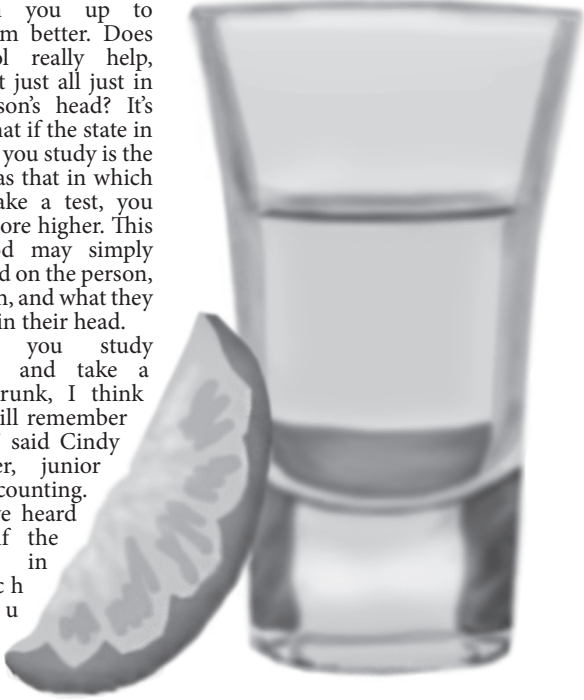

Student opinions differ about drinking alcohol before final exams

Courtney Liebl
contributing writer

Editor's Note: This article was completed as an assignment for a class in the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

The thought process is simple: Take a shot before an exam, and it'll help loosen you up to perform better. Does alcohol really help, or is it just all just in a person's head? It's said that if the state in which you study is the same as that in which you take a test, you will score higher. This method may simply depend on the person, though, and what they think in their head.

"If you study drunk and take a test drunk, I think you will remember more," said Cindy Stueder, junior in accounting. "I have heard that if the state in which you study and the state in which you take the test are the same, then you will do better on the test. It's like if you chew mint gum while studying and chew mint gum while taking a test then it will help you remember more."

While some students believe in the method, other students feel that alcohol does not help. Samantha Johansen, senior in family studies, says that it's all in the mind.

"I feel like it's a mind over matter kind of thing," Johansen said.

If someone were to drink while studying for a test and then drink before taking the test, they may only believe that the alcohol is helping them. Since they think that the alcohol helped them loosen up, they will, in turn, perform better on the test.

"I think the thought of taking the shot before a test does more than actually taking the shot," Johansen said.

A lot of people may try this technique during finals week when things get pretty stressful. They may take a few shots to take the edge off of the stress. If people get stressed out enough they will try it just to see if it works or not. Some students may think that the alcohol will help them relax and calm down more before they take a test.

"I think that if you're drinking to help you relax, there are better ways to help you relax that won't affect your cognitive thinking like alcohol does, especially before taking a test," Johansen said.

There are other ways to get rid of stress during that crazy finals week besides drinking. Just taking a simple study break can help a little bit. Getting up and exercising can help students deal with stress.

There are students who have not tried taking shots or drink before tests, or do not feel like they need to.

"I've personally never done it so I couldn't say if it works or not, but I don't think it could make a big difference," said Hillary Schartz, sophomore in animal sciences and industry. "I still get good grades on tests without drinking alcohol."

While some people believe drinking or taking shots before a test isn't necessarily a bad thing, students may wish to find alternative stress relieving activities.

Military family settles down in Kansas, pursues collegiate dreams

Sean Frye
staff writer

The challenges a military family faces in today's world are very extreme. Deployment to the Middle East, being stationed overseas and moving to a whole new part of the world at the drop of the hat are all part of the risks that Sgt. Michael Davenport and his wife Merri have experienced in their seven years of marriage.

When Merri Davenport's husband was stationed at Fort Riley, after a short time in Belgium, she decided to go back to college and pursue a career in the media field at K-State.

"We found out we were coming to Fort Riley in February of 2011, we got here in May, and I decided that I wasn't going to work," Merri said. "I ended up applying to K-State because they have a great journalism program."

It has been a long journey for the Davenports since their relationship began, when the pair met at Ninety Six High School in Ninety Six, S.C., 11 years ago. The two attended different colleges in South Carolina for two years prior to Michael's decision to enlist in the army. This left Merri with a difficult choice: either follow him or let him go and continue her schooling.

"I was in college and I had to make a choice," Merri said. "We decided to get married because we didn't want to be apart."

The decision came as no surprise to Michael.

"I dated Merri for three and a half years and since day one I knew I would marry her," Michael said. "She is beautiful, smart and has a great sense of humor. Merri was an extremely hard worker even when we were younger."

After Michael enlisted in the U.S. Army and went through basic training, the couple was stationed at Fort Campbell, Ky., where they stayed for four years. From there, Michael was deployed to Iraq two separate times and spent 25 months away from Merri in total.

One of the people Merri leaned on the most while her husband was either at basic training or away on deployment was her sister, Joy Clary.

"She takes everything in life in stride," Clary said about her sister. "She is strong and independent and she handles a deployment with what seems like ease. She also has a very sensitive side and at times I saw her get overwhelmed while he was away. Overall, I admire her ability to separate their love and his duty to our country."

After their time at Fort Campbell, Michael was up for reenlistment in 2009. At that time, Merri decided that she was ready for a journey of her own after seeing her husband go overseas twice. Michael was part of the Military Police (MP) and reenlisted, and an MP spot in Belgium was available. He requested it.

"I told him I wanted an overseas assignment because I wanted an adventure too," Merri said.

The couple was supposed to be in Belgium for three years, but a decision by NATO to dissolve the need for American MPs at the base in Belgium forced an abrupt end to their time there. The Davenports were informed of the decision in February of 2011, and Michael was then re-stationed to Fort Riley, where they arrived in May of 2011.

Despite finding her passion and finally receiving the opportunity to chase her dreams, the adjustment to Kansas has not been easy for Merri. She has struggled to adapt to the different mindsets of her peers, who have at times stereotyped Merri due to her South Carolina heritage and her strong, southern accent.

"It has been harder for Merri because she feels like the people here judge her because of where we are from," Michael said. "If people would take time to know her they would see she is more than just a Southern accent."

While in Belgium, Merri, who worked in the housing offices as a member of the Department of Defense, would go on the Armed Forces Network radio station and discuss housing. That is where she found her passion for radio, and it was an old boss that lit the fire underneath Merri that drove her back to college.

"I had a boss when I was there who died in November of last year, and he had a profound influence on me," Merri said. "He's the reason I decided to pursue my dreams here. He asked me why I didn't have my bachelor's degree. When I told him, he said that I was really smart, but that I needed to look good on paper."

After Merri was accepted to K-State, she was able to transfer 60 credit hours from Lander University, where she attended college back in South Carolina. She entered K-State this past fall semester with junior standing. Merri hopes to finish her college career at K-State in four full semesters and graduate with a degree in journalism.

FOOTBALL

Coach, players discuss practice, upcoming Spring Game

Snyder points out stand-out players during spring practices

Kelly McHugh
sports editor

Head football coach Bill Snyder said he has two expectations for this Saturday's Spring Game, and those expectations are to "come off the field perfectly healthy," and, "that we get better."

When he addressed the media on Tuesday afternoon, Snyder had a lot to say about the spring preparation thus far for his football squad, and while he would like to have 20 full practices, he is making due with this year's 15 spring training practices.

"Fifteen to me seems to be just a tad short," Snyder said, "so we want to take advantage of the Spring Game. We've always tried to make it as productive as we possibly can, certainly it's something for the fans, and I appreciate that and want to do it for that reason, but I want us to gain as much as we can."

Last Saturday afternoon

the team took the field for their own full scrimmage, and worked on everything from their kicking game to their long and short yardage. As for the offense and defense, Snyder thinks they have both seen improvement, however there is always room for growth.

"I think the main thing is to just go out there and have fun, put on a show for the fans"

"Each side had its moments," Snyder said about the team's competition during Saturday's scrimmage, "but nobody dominated the scrimmage from either side of the ball."

Snyder also talked about a few players he has noticed working hard and improving so far this spring. Among those players were Blake Slaughter,

Wildcats lose marathon extra-innings game against Wichita State

Jared King, sophomore outfielder, hits a home run in the fourth inning against Wichita State University in Tointon Family Stadium on Tuesday.

staff writer

K-State fell to 19-22 on the season following a 15-inning, 9-7 loss at home Tuesday against Wichita State University, who boosted their record to 25-19 on the season.

The Wildcats only registered five hits on the evening in Tointon Family Stadium, and did not have one after the seventh inning. Despite the lack of hits, K-State utilized seven walks and three hit batters to get runners on base, while two of their hits went for home runs.

Sophomore pitcher Jared Moore struggled in the start, giving up six runs off seven hits with two walks and no strikeouts in two innings pitched. K-State used seven different pitchers on the evening, with junior Jake Doller taking the loss by giving up two go-ahead runs on a no-out, bases-loaded double in the top of the 15th frame.

After a scoreless first, both teams scored in the second, starting with the Shockers' Don Lambert's two-run shot to right after a leadoff single by Erik Harbutz to take a 2-0 lead.

K-State answered with one run in the bottom of the frame on a collaboration of two seniors, as designated hitter Mike Kindel's grounder to short brought home first baseman Wade Hinkle.

Wichita State turned thier one-run lead into a five-run lead in the top of the third, starting with Dayne Parker's single to left and a walk to Johnny Coy. A single from Casey Gillaspie loaded the bases for Harbutz, whose double brought home two runs. After a walk to Lambert, Ryan Hege singled to left to bring home two more runs and the Shockers held a 6-1 lead.

The Wildcats started their comeback in the bottom of the fourth, using a two-run shot to left field by King, his fourth of the year, to cut the lead to three.

The Wildcats had a big inning of their own in the seventh, started by Jon Davis getting plunked by a pitch and Hinkle working his second walk of the day. After a strike-out by King, Kindel flied out to right, and Davis advanced to third. A throwing error on the play allowed Davis to scamper home and Hinkle to advance to third. K-State took the lead on a three-run homer to left by senior catcher Dan Klein to score Hinkle and senior third baseman Matt Giller.

K-State's lead was nullified in the eighth, as Hege hit a two-out solo shot to tie the game at seven apiece, a homer which would send the game into extra innings.

It wasn't until the top of the 15th inning that another run crossed home, as Doller loaded up the bases with no outs for Don Lambert, whose double scored two runs for the Shockers.

After reloading the bases, Doller got a pair of strikeouts and a line out to get out of the inning with no more damage, but the Wildcats couldn't get anything going at all going in the bottom of the inning and Wichita State left Manhattan with the win.

Up next for the Wildcats is another game against an in-state opponent, as they travel to Lawrence to take on the Jayhawks tonight. First pitch is scheduled for 6 p.m.

TRACK & FIELD

Krais to compete in front of friends, family

Adam Suderman
staff writer

Ryann Krais was like any other high school senior, looking for that opportunity to compete at the highest level while finding a few extra benefits on the side.

Krais, a standout performer at Methacoton High School in Eagleville, Pa, was a three-time Nike National Pentathlon champion and a 2008 USA Track and Field Junior Heptathlon champion. The senior also finished second in the heptathlon and women's 400-meter hurdles at the 2007 USATF Junior Championships.

After two years at UCLA to start her college career, Krais realized that she was looking for a little bit more from her collegiate track experience.

"Throughout the recruiting process, I wasn't looking for necessarily the right things," Krais said. "I was looking for the good weather and the history was what was important to me. I realized after two years at UCLA, just because some things that you think are going to be perfect, doesn't mean that it's the right match for you."

The senior consulted Team USA for guidance in the process and found out that Manhattan might be a place she could finish her career on a high note.

"One of the sports psychologists that I had met through USA track and field recommended that I talk to coach [Cliff] Rovelto," Krais said. "I was using him as just a reference originally for places to spend my last two years of eligibility and through that I thought, 'how could I not come to K-State?' Coach knows what he's doing, he knows how to write a program for a heptathlete."

The decision paid off for Krais as she went on to win the NCAA Championship in the heptathlon, tallying 5,961 points. She also won the event at the USA Championships last summer with a score of 6,030.

During this indoor season, Krais won the individual title in the women's pentathlon in the Big 12 Conference meet, while finishing fifth in the NCAA indoor championships.

After a strong fall of conditioning and training, Krais had to endure a tough start to the winter months, which put her behind on her preferred schedule.

Rovelto says that Krais has taken the setbacks in stride and has accepted the challenges and done well despite them.

"Ryann is such a team player, she's going to do whatever she's asked to do to help the team," Rovelto said. "She's a critical part of just about any relay we put together. In that, she's going to be pretty busy over the next couple weekends."

Now wrapping up her senior season, the Pennsylvania native will be heading to the Penn Relays this weekend to compete in front of her friends and family for the first time since her freshman season at UCLA.

"This is my first year heading their as a part of Kansas State," Krais said. "I got to go there my freshman year and I don't know if I was really prepared as an athlete then. I'm excited to wear K-State proudly in front of my high school team and all of my friends and family back home."

NBA

The San Antonio Spurs clinched the No. 1 seed in the Western Conference for the second straight season after beating the Portland Trail Blazers 124-89 Monday.

Even more important is the fact the Spurs "Big Three" of Tim Duncan, Tony Parker and Manu Ginobili are all healthy entering the postseason for the first time since 2008.

The Spurs earned the top spot in the Western Conference easily, but failed to get out of the first round, becoming the fourth No. 1 seed to lose in the first round in NBA history in the modern seeding format.

The Spurs will play either the Utah Jazz or the Phoenix Suns, who are a game behind the Jazz for the No. 8 spot, in the first round, depending on how the two teams finish the season out.

NFL

The New Orleans Saints controversial off-season does not appear to be calming down anytime soon after the U.S. Attorney's Office in the Eastern District of Louisiana was informed Friday that the Saints general manager Mickey Loomis used an electronic device in his Superdome suite to listen into opposing coaching staffs for almost three NFL seasons, "Outside the Lines" reported Monday.

Loomis, who already faces an eight-game suspension for his role in the Saints' more recent bounty scandal, was reported by "Outside the Lines" to have had the ability to listen in on opposing coaches for most of the 2002 season and for the entirety of the 2003 and 2004 seasons.

A Yahoo Sports story reported that Saints' officials denied the accusations outright. In the article, Saints spokesman Greg Bensel said the report was "1,000 percent false."

NCAA Basketball

Seth Greenberg was fired from his post as the men's basketball coach at Virginia Tech on Monday after the athletic director Jim Weaver and basketball administrator Tom Gabbard came to the decision following an assessment of the program.

The assessment followed a series of assistant coaches leaving Greenberg's staff, the latest being the departure of associate head coach James Johnson. Johnson marks the sixth assistant coach to leave Greenberg's staff in four years and the second in the last two weeks, according to a Yahoo Sports story.

COMIC | Audience leaves act laughing

of the other celebrities she chose to poke fun at.

The comedienne’s upbeat sense of humor shone through the way she conducted herself, often giggling after she told some of her own jokes.

“I thought it was really awesome when she sang like [Michael Jackson] and then did the moon walk,” said Harrison Newman, sophomore in marketing. “The audience went nuts when she did that.”

Although she didn’t get to spend much time interacting with the K-State students that attended her show, Villaseñor commented more than once about how much fun she was having and said the audience members were “pretty cool.”

Toward the end of her show, she encouraged the audience to ask her questions and said, “I will awkwardly try and improvise.”

After being asked about what it was like being on “America’s Got Talent,” she admitted she didn’t want to do the show at first, but had a great experience with it, especially during the live Los Angeles shows.

Villaseñor joked that once she was on the show, she realized she didn’t have a sad story to go along with her life.

“I noticed something I did wrong,” she said. “In all my interviews I was just always like, ‘I love my cat!’ They always were trying to get something sad out of me.”

Audience members left the show laughing and recapping Villaseñor’s jokes and impressions.

“She legitimately sounds like everyone she impersonates,” Hendrick said. “It’s amazing.”
